What did you especially like about the course?

possibility to get feedback on my own work

What could/should be improved?

it should be secured that everyone presents just about 30 minutes and not longer so that there is enough time for discussions

- I somewhat had the impression that this term's colloquium was way less helpful than in the terms before. Maybe this is that students know each other way better, but often presentations were no real presentations, but collections of thoughts. Although I understand that a colloquium should help with current and urgent questions, a decent presentation and paper should be a prerequisite. - Also, I had the feeling that almost no one has really read the papers, which may shape the presentations towards a format like described above. If no one knows what one is talking about, much time is needed to repeat what should be clear from the start. Some way to ensure that student papers are read would be appreciated. - Finally, one should think about inviting both supervisors and co-supervisors to the session. I, personally, feel that a colloquium with current problems/ questions/ progress report is only reasonable if the PhD committee is attending. That seemingly some supervisors assign low priority to these sessions undermines the idea of the Grad School. To facilitate this, I would suggest that actually supervisors should pick dates and presentation slots first and students choose second. The attendance of our professors is a must.
